The Greater Orange Service League recently held a Family Fun Day for homeless kids from Project Hope School and their families at Shaffer Park in Orange.

The GOSL is a non-profit organization for boys in grades 9-12 who attend Orange Unified School District schools and their moms (who serve in an advisory capacity).

"GOSL have come to describe our journey as guiding our high school age young men to be leaders, to see the importance of helping others and to find joy in giving back to their communities," said parent adviser Jody O'Donnell, who helped coordinate the day along with Pamela Allison, executive director of Project Hope School.

Kids in grades kindergarten through eight participated various activities at the carnival game booths, including the ring toss, beanbag toss, basketball hoops and lollipop tree throughout the morning event. GOSL members were responsible for setting up, operating the booths, decorating and cleaning up.
